Prosperity is but a freak of fortune's freakish ways.

And comes to few of all that seek, and yet with fewer stays.

And Fortune seems dispose I to cast her bountles where she will: They fail to some while going fast, and some while standing still. To some, indeed, both large and late; to some, they gather small;
To most who worry, watch and wait, they never come at all.

Misfortune seems, indeed, more free to show her chilling face.

And fingers of adversity that scourge the human race.

Her subjects oft who might be up, behold her with ring frown.

And take the potion from her cup that keeps her victims down.

Ah! who that feels her hand severe will not subscribe to this: He who escapes Misfortune here will not a Fortune miss. CAR. E. J. Asrs.
